This is to ensure that all courses are being taught at the highest of standards in both ethics and quality.

The school curriculum's focus not only on the understanding concepts and theories, but also on their applications to the real world. Students will be challenged to analyze various viewpoints and arguments, collect and examine data, come up with their own arguments and be able to support them with examples and discuss them with students and teachers. Students are going to be challenged to be more active in learning rather than passively listening. If students fall behind or need help with their study skills, most institutions have counseling and tutoring services.

Tracking a student's progress is different for each institution. To do your best, students should have a good grasp on how they will be assessed prior to applying for a certain university.
